Sculpture Exhibit at FDU

"Environmental Excavation," a solo exhibit of sculpture by Linda Stein, opens on Nov. 27 at the Becton Hall Gallery, FDU Rutherford. The exhibit is free and open to the public from Nov. 27 - Dec. 21 and Jan. 3 - 12.

Stein holds a master's degree from Pratt Institute and has studied at the Art Students League and the School of Visual Arts. The American Contemporary Women Artists Exhibit in Washington, DC, included sculptures by Stein.

Her sculptures are stark and primitive shapes decorated with magnesium, copper, aluminum and brass. They suggest ceremonial objects from a mythic civilization or an invented tribe and seem to be excavated rather than sculpted. The sculptural forms — related to trees, roots or bones — twist from the walls with a sense of growth and energy.

The FDU Rutherford gallery, free and open to the public, is open Mon. - Fri. from noon until 5:30 p.m. Saturday hours are 10 a.m. - 2 p.m. For information, c
